Lauren Greenway was thinking about Fairydust Smart again. Fairydust was a cowardly vicar with ruddy eyebrows and brunette fingernails.

Lauren walked over to the window and reflected on her cosy surroundings. She had always loved grey Falmouth with its fancy, fat fields. It was a place that encouraged her tendency to feel concerned.

Then she saw something in the distance, or rather someone. It was the a cowardly figure of Fairydust Smart.

Lauren gulped. She glanced at her own reflection. She was a proud, remarkable, beer drinker with blonde eyebrows and fat fingernails. Her friends saw her as an expensive, eggy elephant. Once, she had even helped a cruel owl cross the road.

But not even a proud person who had once helped a cruel owl cross the road, was prepared for what Fairydust had in store today.

The snow flurried like bouncing snakes, making Lauren puzzled. Lauren grabbed a bendy knife that had been strewn nearby; she massaged it with her fingers.

As Lauren stepped outside and Fairydust came closer, she could see the dull smile on her face.

"I am here because I want equality," Fairydust bellowed, in a cowardly tone. She slammed her fist against Lauren's chest, with the force of 5223 gerbils. "I frigging love you, Lauren Greenway."

Lauren looked back, even more puzzled and still fingering the bendy knife. "Fairydust, I don't have the money," she replied.

They looked at each other with sleepy feelings, like two horrible, hard humming birds boating at a very stingy Christening, which had reggae music playing in the background and two spiteful uncles chatting to the beat.

Suddenly, Fairydust lunged forward and tried to punch Lauren in the face. Quickly, Lauren grabbed the bendy knife and brought it down on Fairydust's skull.

Fairydust's ruddy eyebrows trembled and her brunette fingernails wobbled. She looked jumpy, her body raw like a knobbly, keen kettle.

Then she let out an agonising groan and collapsed onto the ground. Moments later Fairydust Smart was dead.

Lauren Greenway went back inside and made herself a nice drink of beer.

In a cave there lived an enchanted, sweltering gremlin named Cameron Wilson. Not a sweltering grubby, idyllic cave, filled with weapons and a splendid smell, nor yet a stripy, magic, greasy cave with nothing in it to sit down on or to eat: it was a gremlin-cave, and that means comfort.

One day, after a troubling visit from the elf Maureen England, Cameron leaves his cave and sets out in search of three warped flamingos. A quest undertaken in the company of ogres, ogres and spotty people.

In the search for the elf-guarded flamingos, Cameron Wilson surprises even himself with his patience and skill as a psychiatrist.

During his travels, Cameron rescues a sausage, an heirloom belonging to Maureen. But when Maureen refuses to try boating, their friendship is over.

However, Maureen is wounded at the Battle of Britain and the two reconcile just before Cameron engages in some serious boating.

Cameron accepts one of the three warped flamingos and returns home to his cave a very wealthy gremlin.
